CorporateLiveWire

INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY 2018
EXPERT GUIDE

www.corporatelivewire.com

ARS-PATENT

Julius & Creasy
est. 1879

Fitzpatrick | we are IP.

MUHAMMED VALLY INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY ATTORNEYS
PATENTS | TRADE MARKS | COPYRIGHT | DESIGNS
COMMERCIAL | LITIGATION

Steven E. Warner
swarner@fchs.com
+1 202 721 5433
www.fchs.com

Kathryn E. Easterling
keasterling@fchs.com
+1 202 721 5437
www.fchs.com

Fitzpatrick | we are IP

The State of Venue in Patent Cases in the United States

By Steven E. Warner & Kathryn E. Easterling

On 22 May 2017, the Supreme Court of the United States held that 28 U.S.C. §1400(b), known as the "patent venue statute," limits the "residence" of a domestic corporation to the state of incorporation for purposes of personal jurisdiction. Courts and lawyers alike have since been working to determine the effects of TC Heartland[1] on deciding venue in patent law cases.

The History of 28 U.S.C. §1400(b)

In 1897, the U.S. Congress enacted a patent-specific venue statute[2]. This act permitted suit to be brought in the district within which a defendant was either (i) an "inhabitant" – which, for corporations, meant the state of incorporation – or (ii) the district within which the defendant both maintained a "regular and established place of business" and committed an act of infringement. In 1948, the patent venue statute was re-codified as 28 U.S.C. §1400(b), and is still in effect today. Also in 1948, Congress enacted the general venue statute, 28 U.S.C. §1391, which defined "residence" for corporate defendants such that "[a] corporation may be sued in any judicial district in which it is incorporated or licensed to do business or is doing business, and such judicial district shall be regarded as the residence of such corporation for venue purposes."

Courts have since concluded differently as to whether "resides" as used in §1400(b) incorporated "residence" as stated in §1391(c). In Fourco Glass Co. v. Transmirra Products Corp., 353 U.S. 222 (1957), the Supreme Court rejected the interpretation that §1391(c) defined residence under §1400(b), holding that §1400(b) "is the sole and exclusive provision controlling venue in patent infringement actions."

In 1988, Congress amended §1391(c) such that "[f]or purposes of venue under this chapter, a defendant that is a corporation shall be deemed to reside in any judicial district in which it is subject to personal jurisdiction at the time the action is commenced." The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit then interpreted §1391(c) in VE Holding Corp. v. Johnson Gas Appliance Co., 917 F.2d 1574 (1990), holding that this new language in §1391 "established the definition for all other venue statutes under the same 'chapter'" – including §1400(b). In 2011, Congress further amended §1391. Amended §1391(c)(2) stated "[f]or all venue purposes," certain entities, "whether or not incorporated, shall be deemed to reside, if a defendant, in any judicial district in which such defendant is subject to the court's personal jurisdiction with respect to the civil action in question."

TC Heartland

TC Heartland originated as a jurisdictional dispute between Kraft Foods Group Brands LLC ("Kraft") and TC Heartland LLC ("TC Heartland"). Kraft sued TC Heartland in the U.S. District Court of Delaware alleging infringement of Kraft's patents. TC Heartland was not registered to conduct business in Delaware and had no meaningful local presence there, but did ship its allegedly infringing products into the state.

TC Heartland moved to either dismiss the case or to transfer venue, arguing that it did not "reside" in Delaware under the first clause of 28 U.S.C. §1400(b), and that it had no "regular and established place of business" in Delaware under the second clause of §1400(b). The court rejected TC Heartland's motion. TC Heartland petitioned the Federal Circuit for a writ of mandamus, which the Federal Circuit denied. The Federal Circuit concluded that subsequent statutory amendments to 28 U.S.C. §1391(c) had effectively amended §1400(b), and that the definition of "resides" for purposes of §1400(b) was now the definition under §1391(c). Under this interpretation, TC Heartland resided in Delaware under §1391(c), and, thus, under §1400(b). TC Heartland petitioned the Supreme Court for certiorari, which was granted.

The Supreme Court reversed the Federal Circuit's holding that the court in Delaware had jurisdiction over TC Heartland under §1400(b). The Court stated that, in Fourco[3], it had "definitively and unambiguously" held that "reside[nce]" under §1400(b) meant the state of incorporation in the context of domestic corporations. While the amended §1391 included the phrase "[f]or all venue purposes," the version of §1391 at issue in Fourco included similar phrasing – "for venue purposes" – and the Court did not see material differences between these two phrases. Kraft argued that the phrase "all venue purposes" meant all venue purposes, not "all venue purposes except for patent venue." The Court, however, noted that the plaintiffs in Fourco advanced this same argument, which remained unpersuasive. Moreover, the Court held that the addition of the word "all" to the phrase "for venue purposes" did not evidence any intent on the part of Congress to reconsider Fourco.

The Court further noted that the amended §1391 has a "saving clause" expressly providing that §1391 does not apply when "otherwise provided by law." Fourco's version of §1391 included no such exception, yet the Court in Fourco still held that "resides" in §1400(b) had its original meaning and was not affected by §1391(c). By including the "saving clause," Congress "makes explicit the qualification that this Court previously found implicit in the statute."

Finally, the Court noted that Congress in 2011 gave no indication of intent to ratify the Federal Circuit's 1990 VE Holding decision, and found that the amendments to §1391 "undermine that decision's rationale." Therefore, the Court found that "reside[nce]" in §1400(b) referred only to the state of incorporation, as held in Fourco.

In re Cray[4] and the Aftermath of TC Heartland

Since TC Heartland, fewer cases have been filed in historically popular patent venues (such as the Eastern District of Texas), while more cases have been filed in common states of incorporation (such as Delaware). A survey from September 2017 found that, in the four months following the TC Heartland decision, the number of cases filed in the Eastern District of Texas dropped by almost two-thirds. Conversely, the number of cases filed in the District of Delaware nearly doubled.[5]

Motions to transfer based on lack of jurisdiction were filed in many ongoing cases following TC Heartland. These motions, however, have not been universally successful. Some courts have taken the view that TC Heartland did not constitute a change in the law, but only affirmed the previous interpretation of §1400(b) and the holding of Fourco, which "has been available to every defendant since 1957."[6] In these cases, if a defendant had not already brought a timely venue challenge, it was found to have waived its right to challenge venue, and could not raise the challenge now based on TC Heartland.

In re Cray raised one of these venue challenges, which addressed the "alternative" way of finding jurisdiction under §1400(b) – "where the defendant … has a regular and established place of business."[7] Cray originated in the Eastern District of Texas, and the Wisconsin corporation Cray, Inc.'s only connection to the forum was a sales employee who lived in the district and worked from home. The district court found the employee's residence qualified as a "regular and established" place of business, and set forth a four-part test for what constitutes such a place.[8] The Federal Circuit granted Cray mandamus relief, and vacated the district court's finding that venue was appropriate. The Federal Circuit rejected the four-part test, and established what constituted a "regular and established" place of business: (a) a "physical place" (not merely a physical presence); (b) which is "regular and established"; and (c) "of the defendant." In Cray, the employee's home did not qualify as being "of the defendant," and therefore jurisdiction in Texas was inappropriate. Cray thus further narrowed the venues available to a patent owner under §1400(b).

Considerations Going Forward

Both TC Heartland and In re Cray restrict venue options for patent cases. These restrictions should simplify choosing venue for patent owners. Now a patent owner is likely to file in the state where a potential defendant is incorporated. This will ultimately decrease "forum-shopping" in patent cases.

Steven E. Warner is a partner of Fitzpatrick, Cella, Harper & Scinto (Fitzpatrick). He routinely lectures on intellectual property law matters for professional organisations such as the District of Columbia Bar and is chair of the firm's industrial equipment and manufacturing group. He has a Juris Doctorate from The George Washington University and a B.S. in mechanical engineering from The Rochester Institute of Technology. Prior to joining the firm, Mr. Warner was a Primary Examiner at the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office.

Kathryn E. Easterling is an associate at Fitzpatrick working in patent litigation, trademarks, and inter partes reviews. Prior to joining Fitzpatrick, Kathryn was a medical researcher at Georgetown Medical Center working in neuroscience, specifically, stroke research. She has a Juris Doctorate from Vanderbilt University. During law school, she worked with the MacArthur Foundation Research Network on Law and Neuroscience. Kathryn also has a B.S., magna cum laude, in neuroscience from The College of William and Mary.

1. TC Heartland LLC v. Kraft Foods Group Brands LLC No. 16-341 (U.S. May 22, 2017).
2. Act of March 3, 1897, ch. 395, 29 Stat. 695
3. Fourco, 353 U.S. at 226, 228.
4. In re Cray Inc., 871 F.3d 1355 (Fed. Cir. 2017).
5. Ryan Davis, Delaware Booming, Texas Fading as TC Heartland Takes Hold, Law360.com, https://www.law360.com/articles/965982/delaware-booming-texas-fading-as-tc-heartland-takes-hold (Sept. 21, 2017).
6. Cobalt Boats, LLC v. Sea Ray Boats, Inc., No. 2:15-cv-21 (E.D. Va. June 7, 2017); James Dabney, TC Heartland And Its Aftermath: A Litigant's View, Law360.com, https://www.law360.com/articles/966696/tc-heartland-and-its-aftermath-a-litigant-s-view (Sept. 28, 2017).
7. In re Cray, 871 F.3d at 1360.
8. Raytheon v. Cray, No. 15-cv-01554 (E.D. Tex. Jun. 29, 2017).

CorporateLiveWire

Wired

Connecting The Corporate World

LuxuryTravelGuide

AN INSIGHT FOR THE AFFLUENT TRAVELLER

MedicalLiveWire